A Translation

New Books published by JOHN STOCKDALE, Piccadilly.

A Translation of the Memoirs of Eradut Khan, a Nobleman of Hindostan ; containing interesting Anecdotes of the Emperor Aumulgeer Aurungzebe, and of his Successors, Shaw Aulum and Jebraunder Shaw : in which are displayed the Causes of the very precipitate Decline of the Mogul Empire in India. By Jonathan Scott, Captain in the Service of the Honourable East-India Company, and private Persian Translator to Warren Hastings, Esq. late Governor General of Bengal, &c. &c. Quarto. 4s. 6d. Boards.

The following Character is taken from the Monthly Review, June, 1786.

“ This short but interesting work comprises a period of history of which we have hitherto had no authentic account, though the important events occurred within the present century. The great recommendation of the sheets now offered to the public, is, that they were written in the midst of action, by a person, in some measure materially concerned in most of the revolutions, as being more or less in the confidence of the principal actors. Nor are they less to be esteemed for being translated from the original Persian, by one who, being acquainted with the countries where these curious transactions passed, is in no instance liable to those mistakes, so frequently found when the translator has no knowledge of his subject, except what he obtains by the help of his dictionary.

“ If the encouragement which the Public may give to such works as this should happily co-operate with the liberality of Mr. Hastings, who has so generously promoted the study of the languages of the East, we may hope for various accounts of the arts and sciences, natural history, and politics, of these countries which have been so long buried in the obscurity of unknown tongues.

“ The work before us is an immediate continuation of the Journal of Bernier, who recorded what he was himself witness to. It contains a summary of the revolutions which affected the whole Mogul empire during the space of five years, from the 21st of February, 1707, to the end of the year 1712, in which short time, the great emperor,
Shaw

Shaw Aulumgeer, who is better known in Europe by the name of Aurengzebe, obeyed the call of nature. Azim Shaw, his second son, usurped the throne, and after a short reign, was slain in battle by his elder brother Shaw Alum; who in the year 1712, died of poison. His son, Jehaunder Shaw, obtained the empire by the sword, and by the decision of the same power forfeited it, with his life, at the end of nine months, to his nephew Ferokfere, son to Azeem Ooshawn, who was the second son to Shaw Aulum; and with this important event, which settled the throne of Hindostan in peace, till the incursion of Kouli Khan, this interesting morsel of history concludes.

“Those who are not deterred from the perusal of this treatise by the novelty and uncouth aspect of the proper names, will find in many parts of it such incidents and descriptions as will enable them the better to understand the accounts of those transactions, which have so lately employed the attention of the public.”

Historical Tracts: by Sir John Davies, Attorney-General and Speaker of the House of Commons in Ireland; consisting of, 1. A Discovery of the true Cause why Ireland was never brought under Obedience of the Crown of England; 2. A Letter to the Earl of Salisbury, on the State of Ireland in 1607; 3. A Letter to the Earl of Salisbury in 1610, giving an Account of the Plantation in Ulster; 4. A speech to the Lord Deputy in 1613, tracing the ancient Constitution of Ireland. To which is prefixed, a new Life of the Author, from authentic Documents. Octavo. 5s. Boards.

The following Character is taken from the English Review,
October, 1786.

“Although every age is forward to assert a superiority in improvement and knowledge, over those that preceded it; and that, in truth, the natural progress of things justifies, on the whole, such a claim; yet it may be safely affirmed, affirmed, that, in the highest ranks and departments in the state, we have not, at the present moment, to boast of such a compass of ability and learning as distinguished and adorned the court of James I. Very few of our nobility, scarcely one indeed, is distinguished by superior genius in philosophy, or attainments in literature; and, for the public offices, moderate abilities, with experience and political interest, are sufficient to raise the favourite of fortune to the very highest of them. The venerable judge, who now fills the high office of lord chief justice of England, will bear to be compared even with Coke; but where, among all our statesmen and philosophers of high rank, is there to be found a Northampton or a Salisbury, a Napier or a Verulam? In the period alluded to, men were exceedingly learned; and they made their learning to bear, in too great profusion perhaps, upon all subjects that came under the consideration of the legislature, or the cognizance of government. Their pedantry may now appear ridiculous; but the general maxims of jurisprudence and civil policy, which they derived from systematic reading, on the subjects that concern the state, and on all subjects in literature and science, which all, as Cicero observes, run into one another; the general maxims which they derived from so extensive a sphere of contemplation enabled them, on some important occasions, to control the natural fluctuation and instability of men's minds, and to perform the greatest services to the public. Nor ought we to exclude, from the number of the accomplished great, the king himself, who, with profound learning, was not destitute of political wisdom; and who possessed a faculty of distinguishing, and a disposition to reward, literary merit.

“The historical tracts of Sir John Davies, and the accounts we have of his life, which excited these reflections, are a proof of their solidity. He was raised to the most important stations, in a very learned age, by superior accomplishments; and shews us by what maxims Ireland, that had for so many centuries resisted all the efforts of former princes, came at last to be settled and civilized in the reign of James I. The merit of the tracts before us, and the present circumstances of that country, which occasioned their publication at this time, induce us to lay an account before our readers.”

THE

New Books, published by JOHN STOCKDALE, Piccadilly

THE HISTORY of the UNION between ENGLAND and SCOTLAND ;

With a Collection of Original Papers relating thereto.

By the celebrated DANIEL DE FOE.

With an Introduction, in which the Consequences and Probability of a like Union between this Country and Ireland are considered,

By JOHN LEWIS DELOLME,

Author of the Work on the Constitution of England.

To which is prefixed,

A LIFE of the AUTHOR, and a copious INDEX.

In One large Volume Quarto, with an elegant Engraving of the Author, Price 1l. 7s. in boards.

The Union between England and Scotland, being an extremely interesting Event, has led the Publisher to imagine, that a New Edition of this Work of De Foe, which is grown very scarce, would be acceptable to the Public, especially at the present Time, when the Situation of Affairs in Ireland induces many Persons to wish, that a similar Union between Great Britain and that Kingdom may take place, as it may cause such an Union, if not to be effected, at least to be proposed, and to become, for a Time, the Subject of Debate in both Countries.

"I was" says De Foe himself, in his Appeal to Honour and Justice, p. 50. "from my first entering into the Knowledge of Public Matters, and have ever been to this Day, a sincere Lover of the Constitution of my Country; zealous for Liberty, and the Protestant Interest; but a constant follower of moderate Principles, a vigorous Opposer of hot Measures in all Parties: I never once changed my Opinion, my Principles, or my Party; and let what will be said of changing Sides, this I maintain, that I never once deviated from the Revolution Principles, nor from the Doctrine of Liberty and Property, on which it was founded."
